SOCIOLOGY

Our publishing in Sociology, with its foundations in social justice, public sociology and ethnographic research, continues to extend into new areas, covering key issues for society and global social challenges from migration through to changes in the world of work. Some of our core and expanding areas include digital sociology, equality and diversity, social movements and sociology of culture.

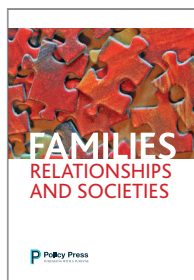

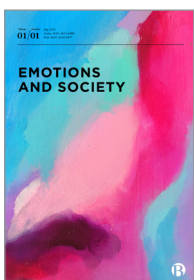

We publish across all formats and our 21st Century Standpoints series brings pressing public issues to a wide readership, shaping public conversations at this time of social, political, economic and cultural disruption. The titles move beyond simple critique to propose better ways of understanding, and living in, our world.

We are particularly interested in scholarship that tackles the global social challenges of our time, including: poverty, wealth and inequality, conflict, security, peace and justice, and equality of opportunity and social justice.
