East Asian International Relations

Series Editors: Yongjin Zhang, University of Bristol, UK, Shogo Suzuki, University of Manchester, UK and Peter Kristensen, University of Copenhagen, Denmark

Combining original research and theoretical innovation, this series provides fresh insights into the changing international politics of East Asia and into International Relations (IR) theory.

East Asia is now arguably the most dynamic and consequential region in world politics, not least because of the rise of China. As a key driver of global growth, East Asia has generated a shift in power dynamics, which, accompanied by the increasing strategic rivalry between the United States and China, has created new challenges for governing the regional – and global – political economy.

The series publishes cutting-edge research on the changing international politics of East Asia. It covers the security dynamics, political economy, causes of conflict and cooperation, and the ongoing transformation of the region, as well as the impact of such transformation on the wider global order.
